Bath Spa University has no investments in extractor fossil fuel companies, and commits to ensuring that they will be excluded from any future investments we make. This applies across all asset classes and to our whole investment portfolio.

We are recommitting to this step because we want to protect the future of all our students, by committing to preventing further harm and safeguarding a liveable climate for all.

BSU are keen to support the Paris Agreement, limiting global warming to below 2 degrees, to which the fossil fuel industry is a significant threat. Given the threat fossil fuel poses to our climate, we feel it is necessary to avoid supporting this industry to any extent. We also believe universities have a unique responsibility to act for the common good, and are aware more than half of UK Higher Education institutions have committed to divest so far; we wish to add our voices to this movement.

Our university is a globally responsible institution and have committed to improving sustainability year on year. We commit to remaining fossil free and supporting a transition to a low carbon world, and hope that many more in our sector will join us.

Yours sincerely,

Jo Stocks
Chief Financial Officer
